THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

During the ten months since the last session of the North West Council the sum of $2,278 75 has been received for liquor permits, and the question readily presents itself, should the permit system not be abolished? The granting of so many permits displeases our temperance friends, and the others grumble at having so restricted a permit both in quantity and time, and assert their neighbors are more generously dealt with. But taking into account the liquor that is legally and illegally brought into the country, the time has no doubt arrived when liquor should be allowed to be sold. The poisonous intoxicants sold at present all over the Territories, as well as the decoction illegally purchased as whiskey is most pernicious to great numbers of draughty consumers. The Calgary Herald in an article on this topic, condemns the system of granting permits for other than medicinal purpose, and asserts that the Council has pandered too much to the wants of the intemperate in communities. It further adds that the Council is to blame for ignoring the sentiments of the temperance people and is alarmed at the proposal to license breweries; illicit distilling, being in the writers opinion better than legalized breweries. We honor the man or woman who asks for a permit for the purpose to which it is to be used, but the medicinal permit, nine cases out of ten, is a falsification. We cannot understand how the temperance people have been ignored, indeed they seem to have got their desire all along, but the sentiment of illicit distillation being better than legalized breweries, we consider an example of the frothy nothings a temperance advocate of the old school lets off. The drunkenness in this country is not caused by the liquor procured by permits, but is the effect of the strict law forcing men to drink painkiller, ginger, lemon and last, not least, chloral and chlorodyne. Who that has resided in these Territories some time and travelled in them, has not met the debauchee, old and young, sent here as exiles of no use elsewhere, and find them using drugs, when fiery poisonous whiskey is not procurable? Is this country to be made an asylum for inebriates, and right minded, sober, industrious toilers of the soil, to be hampered for ever with prohibition laws, and begrudged their glass of beer, through the croakings of Mr. Drink water, and a few bacchanalian shouts from a few confirmed toppers? We visited some years ago the city of Gothenberg in Sweden, to inquire into the working of the total prohibition liquor law which had been in force there some time, and found the system had made matters much worse, through the introduction of poisonous intoxicants and drugs, the latter being used to a fearful extent, particularly chloral. Visit France, where on a Sunday all can have their liquor pure and straight: camp next in Bible loving Scotland in any of the crowded cities on a Sunday, where saloons are closed and whiskey unobtainable, and witness the lapsed masses having a good time, the shebeens doing a roaring trade, and the police cells filled to overflowing at night. Better a thousand times to have the licensed houses opened, than have the people drugged and maddened. That the licensing of breweries would stop illicit distilling and drunkenness, to a great extent cannot be doubted, for many who drank only beer before coming to this country, now drink whiskey, and would gladly prefer the former. No prohibitory liquor law will ever stop drinking, a higher principle must guide a people. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," education exalteth a nation, and these great factors must be looked to to diminish inebriation in any kingdom in the world.

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE.

There can be but few, and those chiefly miserable bachelors, who will not be much interested in the decision recently given by a well known English judge, to the effect that in the eyes of the law, the detention of a pupil after school hours as a punishment for having failed to learn lessons ordered to be studied at home, amounts to an assault on the part of the master. This decision however distasteful it may be to school teachers, will be approved without qualification by children, acceptable to many parents, while our local magistrates will thank us by calling their attention to it, by increasing their acquaintance with their legal duties, which they invariably when appealed to so cheerfully undertake, however distasteful they may be. We have no doubt, however, that a parent can delegate authority to the teacher, even to the length of making children prepare lessons at home, although it may be illegal when objected to by a parent, so that we advise the youngsters to ascertain the parental views on the point before beginning to grow. Of course it is impossible to lay down the exact limit of time within which a pupil may be made to study profitably and safely, when so much depends upon the capacity of the individual scholar, the intensity of application during hours of study, and the nature of the subjects studied. About one thing however there can exist no difference of opinion, that is, the baneful effect upon children of any open conflict between masters and parents, and in this connection we can not too strongly urge upon the latter the absolute necessity of most carefully and constantly not only putting down any attempt on the part of children to speak disrespectfully of their teacher when out of school, but also avoiding the mention of them themselves, unless in terms calculated to elevate them in the eyes of the young ones committed to their charge. The habit, generally the result of thoughtlessness, of speaking in (to put it very mildly) a disparaging tone of grown up people in the presence of children is we fear as common as it is vicious, and we have known instances of people so utterly lost to all sense of decency as to send impertinent messages to teachers through their own children. To return to the matter of hours of study, it certainly seems on the face of it natural to those who know any thing of the exhausting nature of brain work to suppose that if properly attended to, children up to the age of say twelve years will receive more harm than good from having to apply themselves for more than six hours a day closely to lessons. Of course as the brain gets older and stronger from use, the hours of study may be beneficially increased, and probably some home preparation of tasks fairly expected, but even then the increased demand on the young mind by the more advanced subjects presented to it, must be carefully considered in computing hours of study by the wise and conscientious teacher. Such subjects as music and the practical teaching of certain branches of natural science may safely enough be added to the usual hours devoted entirely to book work. The whole subject is so difficult to reduce to any exact rule that we must chiefly trust to the discretion of teachers, and we may feel very thankful that Prince Albert already offers so many educational advantages, and that there is a near prospect of the already existing facilities being increased.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH.

Many think in Britain the purchase of church livings, as it is carried out there, is a scandal, and look at it as equivalent to the sale of the cure of souls. Now, conformable may look upon it in the same light, but it is certain that good churchmen do not. The subject has again been before the British Parliament and two bills regulating the sale of church livings have been introduced, and both referred to the same committee. Singularly enough, no proposition is made to put an end to the practice by legislative enactment. The feeling appears to be general that the heirs of the person who built and endowed a church should have the right to nominate to the Bishop the vicar or curate. No one is eligible to the position who has not taken orders, and whose character, scholarship and orthodoxy are not approved by the officials of the church. The equity and propriety of disposing of the right of presentation to a vacant ecclesiastical benefice, apart from the estate of the original patron, are also generally acknowledged. There are many reasons why church livings are sold. The estate may belong to minor heirs, and be involved. Money is needed to pay off debts, and there is no one of the requisite age and judgment to make the selection and presentation. The proprietor may be himself in debt, and unwilling to part with his hereditary or ancestral estate; he may take no interest in church matters, be a non-conformist or freethinker; he may think the selection of the parish priest could be better made by some other person. There are also many reasons for the purchase of advowsons. Many persons of wealth have such an interest in the established church and the young men who are preparing to enter it, that they are willing to pay handsomely for the privilege of nominating candidates. Wealthy relatives often desire to give a member of their family a business start in preaching. The church comes in handy for the youngest son of the squire who has a large family.

There are about 13,000 beneficiaries in the Church of England, viz:—Belonging to the Crown, 1,144; to the bishops, 2,224; to deans and chapters, 931; to the universities, 770; to the parochial clergy, 931; to private persons, 7,000. There is a fund known as "Queen Anne's Bounty," which is set apart for the purchase of advowsons and turning them over to the crown. Nominally the Queen, but in reality the prime minister, nominates the candidates to the livings that are purchased by the trustees of this fund. The Church of England is aristocratic in its tendencies, and is intimately linked with the State. Its bishops sit in the House of Lords and are known as "the lords spiritual." Its organization, like that of the Catholic Church, is outside of its membership. Having few democratic features, its communicants have not claimed the right to select their own ministers. Notwithstanding the great progress of popular sentiments in political matters, there has been little change in the opinions of churchmen in regard to the method of selecting parsons. The mechanics, farmers and small traders are thought to be not competent to pass on the merits of religious teachers. There are objections to giving all the appointing power to the Crown, as the pulpits might be filled by persons who owed it by political subservience. For bishops again, if he had all the appointments, might desire men who would reflect all his peculiar religious views, and he would likely practice nepotism. The patron of the church, who resides in the parish, will be likely to desire an efficient curate and to make a wise selection.

Neither of the bills before Parliament propose to abolish the right of the patron of a church to make presentations to the bishop in case of a vacancy, or ever to prevent the sale of advowsons altogether. The objections raised to the present method of appointing ministers to take charge of parishes come from persons who are not members of the established church, certain not from communicants in good standing. The latter are satisfied with the present state of things, and seeing they are pleased it seems needless for others to complain.

The Catholic and Methodist Churches are not consulted in relation to their choice of a pastor. The bishop appoints whom he pleases, and there is scarcely any dissension in these churches in regard to the matter of pastors. But in churches where the democratic principle prevails in regard to the selection of pastors, there is no end to dissensions and quarrels. The practice has been for a dozen or so of ministers to preach trial sermons in order to give the congregation of these churches an opportunity to make a selection. When the day for election occurs, there are often five or six "candidates in the field." Electioneering is resorted to, as it is in a town meeting. One party wins and the others do not all ways take it as becomes humble Christians. They often secede and form a new church or unite with a rival one. Sometimes they remain in the church in order to cause trouble. Possibly churches are better satisfied with their pastors when they are chosen for them, than when they select them by popular vote. The sale of church livings does not appear to be as bad a practice as it has been represented to be by some who do not understand its workings.
